We are very pleased to announce our online store is open. We've tried to make your experience easy and streamlined. In addition to all The Mozart Effect books and recordings, we carry some items personally selected by Don Campbell to stimulate, educate, and amaze.

Do You Hear What I Hear?

by Don Campbell

"Music affects the brain and body in fundamental ways that science has yet to explain. It is a mysterious energy that can enchant, energize, heal, and haunt us. It is far more than what meets the ear, it is a power that speaks with the spirit and soul."

Tomatis in the News

If you missed the amazing 5/5/03 Today Show interview with Valerie Dejean of the Spectrum Center in Bethesda, surf on over to the MSNBC site to read "Mozart as Good Medicine? How a Special Music and Sound Therapy [Tomatis] Has Become a Turning Point for an Autistic Child." Their website includes a video clip from the moving interview.

You might also be interested in When Listening Comes Alive by Paul Madaule. In this book, Madaule demystifies The Tomatis Listening Method as both clinician and client. He has summarized these methods and has included a unique section of daily exercises that will allow you to develop and improve your listening skills on your own. This is a book about listening at all stages of life— for parents-to-be, hard-working professionals, teachers, early childhood educators, and parents seeking help for learning disabled or difficult teenagers. Available for $14.95 at the new online store.

Why Mozart?

Why not Bach? Or Beethoven?

We've been asked these questions many times. There may be individual works by other composers that display elements of the Mozart Effect. However, Mozart is the one composer whose works consistently reflect this phenomenon. "To me, Mozart's music is like the great architecture of Moghul India... It is the transparency, the arches, the rhythms within the open space that so profoundly stir the human spirit."

Introducing one of the newest additions to The Mozart Effect recordings:
